

WHY PRODUCTIVITY TRAINING IS ESSENTIAL TO YOUR ORGANIZATION

Lost productivity costs U.S. businesses
$1.2 trillion
annually.

Source: Willis Towers Watson, 2017

When company leaders want to increase staff productivity, they often look at improving how their employees manage their time and workloads and enhance their problem-solving skills. Through a well-designed productivity training program, workers can learn how to be more efficient, resulting in a number of benefits for the company. For example, projects will be better planned and organized, deadlines will be met and top priorities stay where they need to be—on top.

In today's rapid-paced business world, organizations have an urgent need to commit to training as a tool to increase productivity. They can no longer afford workers who are not producing to their highest capacities. Businesses with productivity challenges cite:

- Long work hours as the norm
- High staff stress levels
- Concerns about burnout and turnover
- Job dissatisfaction or disengagement
- Busyness that doesn't contribute to core company objectives

Even the best companies can have one or more of these challenges. Productivity training provides the building blocks to a more efficient workforce.

Applying Productivity Training and Tools for Improvements

SkillPath Enterprise Solutions brings an all-inclusive approach to productivity training, offering a clear path of improvement to organizations across the world, including Fortune 500 companies, small businesses and nonprofits.

Productivity training from Enterprise Solutions develops employees through its blended learning approach, which combines classroom instruction, virtual training and eLearning content. Popular topics focused on customer service, project management, time management and critical thinking help employees work and meet the demands of growing, fast-paced businesses and enable them to work smarter.

Tools and techniques, working processes and systems are fundamental to productivity improvements. Employees who practice and experiment with these tools not only find themselves more efficient; they bring these new habits to the workplace and make improvements throughout the company.

As an investment, productivity training offers one of the greatest direct impacts to your bottom line.

In today's rapid-paced business world, organizations have an urgent need to commit to training as a tool to increase productivity. They can no longer afford workers who are not producing to their highest capacities.